Discussion

- The distance education form may no longer serve a purposeful use for course quality control. Perhaps the COOL committee could review the form for revision based on more current course standards.
- It may be unsuitable to use the COR for student equity considerations. The COR provides mostly information about “what” may be covered in a course rather than “how” the content is implemented. Perhaps this information is more suitable for the program review form.

- It may be helpful to develop a guideline for how departments consider how many and which classes to offer as an honors course. Topics for consider could include impact on enrollment, similar content overlap with other departments, and feasibility of teaching all course offerings within a two-year timeline for students transferring.
